Bellows

- Goldsmiths have been around for thousands of years, and their craft has been highly valued in many cultures. In addition to creating ornamental pieces, goldsmiths may also repair damaged jewelry and work with other precious metals, such as silver and platinum.
- The process of converting raw gold into ornaments requires several steps. After the gold is melted down into a liquid form, it is poured into a mold to create a basic shape for the ornament. The gold is then cooled and polished to remove any imperfections or rough edges.
- Next, the gold is shaped into the desired design using a variety of tools, such as hammers, pliers, and shaping dies. Depending on the complexity of the design, this process may take several hours or even days to complete.
- Once the design is finalized, any gems or other embellishments are added to the piece. The goldsmith carefully sets each stone in place, taking care to ensure that it is secure and will not come loose over time.
- Finally, the piece is polished and finished to bring out its luster and shine. The finished product is a beautiful and unique work of art that can be worn or displayed for generations to come.
- All this work needs high level of dedication, focus, skill and patience.
